

Techsage Tips

- Overcharging does set your passive bonuses back a bit, but it's often worth the temporary sacrifice for the large boost it gives.
- Biogen Mist is less effective than other Recoveries if it only hits you, but extremely powerful if you catch all of your allies in the burst.
- Arc Thrower can chain to your allies. It doesn't hurt them, but it can help you reach further away foes and it also counts toward increasing the damage.
- Flying (as with Repulsor Boost) is like shifting but also ignores normal difficult terrain and treats walls as difficult terrain (i.e. 2 squares of fly allows you to cross a wall).

Rules Notes

- When Overcharging, you can use two total energy from any combination of mods. It's possible to be gaining the active effect from a mod by having energy on it while also Overcharging it with energy from the other two mods, effectively quadrupling the effect.
- You can't Overcharge the same mod twice in the same turn (no sextupling!).
- Rapid Reboot doesn't cause your Duration-based skills to tick down.
- When determining range for VEx Railgun, count your own square (i.e. a foe within melee range is 1 square away).
- Chain is an effect that causes an effect to "jump" to another foe within a specified range. Generally, as with Arc Thrower, it must target unique units with each jump.

You are the Techsage, Progress Incarnate. Your soul was touched by the spirit of progress and has spent its lifetimes as legendary inventors, scientists and engineers.

The Ascendancy spent years trying to discover the secret of incarnating the soul of progress. The secret of boundless ingenuity and creativity existed only in one place: the minds of children.

Assigned a research role, some Techsages reasoned that they had the most to lose in the conflict. So, they built combat armor suits and joined the battle, bringing their technical savvy... and lots of big guns.
